Warned of Her Uncle's Death. My friend occupied a house in which the kitchen and storage-room were detached. She went, as was her usual nightly custom. Entering, she tried to light the gas, but was unsuccessful in every cudeavor, for a constant breeze extinguished the light of a match. Suddenly the room became illuminated with a bluish light and the saw distinctly two chairs move towards one another and then a codin was placed on them, and resting in it the corpse of her uncle.

The fright took the power of speech from her and she swooned away. Remaining longer than was her usual cu-tom, her hushand sought hay, and on seeing her condition sent for a physician. Regaining consciouses, she told what she saw, and of course it was attributed to nervousness.

Two hours later she received a tolegram saying: "Father wisited to be buried from your home. His corpse will arrive in the morning."

An Electric Ghost. During a thunder storm one night last August I was sitting alone in the house Just after one of the most hair-raising flashes of lightning I felt a peculiar sensation, and upon looking up beheld before me a-something. Before I could speak it ada-something. Before I could speak it advanced, shook my hand and, waving his left hand as if to command silence, said:

"Young man. I am the spirit of the first man who departed from this world with the aid of electricity, and until I receive another shock and thus become alive again and die in the rightful manner I will be unable to appear before the throne of God. I now command you to let my fate become known, in order that it may serve as a warning to others who may choose to commit audice in this manner. Do you promise?

Anxiou to get rid of the presence, I assented. As I arise to bid it good-by I stumbled against something, tripped up and feil over on my face. Upon shaking myself together and getting up i cound that I was alone in the room, but on the foor I observed a small sheet of red colored paper with the following inscription written upon it:

a lark. In the night I awoke feeling that I was not alone. The full moon's light lay almost like sunshine down the centre of the room, and there—oh! the awiul sight—a dozen horrible figures with clay-stained clothing, as if they just had come from their graves, stood, their wrampings flapping like great bata wings when they moved, their eyes burning like red coals in their ash-colored faces.

Among them were four great, lean, gray wolves, with white, orusi teeth, licking their bloody, nairy coats. Up the stairs came other lagures trooping, until the room was full of the awful things, swaying to and fro. gesticulating, gibbering, lighting, labbering, but always in a whisper.

I say watching them, arraid to even wink. Suddenly one turned and saw my eyes, and in a horrible whisper, shricked:

Come, she is awake! She has seen us! She shall die!

Thoy all turned their burning eyes towards me, and began to whisper: "We will divide her among us!" 'Her eyes are mine!"

found myself returning from a visit to my grandparents. My way was a footpath leading over pastures from one village to another. The moon was shining. I hurried on, unconcernedly and happy, and had about half finished my walk when, suddenly, I benefid in a little distance before me a tall, white apparition.

For a moment my heart must have stopped beating, so great was the stock I received. Incapable of moving, i stood rooted to be ground. What could it be?

I did not believe in ghosts, and there was at that time, in my opinion, not another girl as cool-headed as myself, but there was that formidab.-looking object looming up before me. Lacking the courage to walk up to it and investigate the mystery, neither thinking of rhoning away. I would have remained all night on the same spot, had not to my unspeakable relief, the anonthion slowly turned around and proved itself to be a white horse, which had hitherto showed its side to me.
